How Does Medicaid Work for Outpatient Addiction Treatment?

Medicaid is now required to cover behavioral health services, including drug and alcohol rehab. Whether or not Medicaid Drug Rehab coverage will pay out in an individual case depends on the particulars in that case. To see if you qualify for coverage of any or all or part of your addiction treatment, ask Renaissance Recovery, Ogden Utah staff for help obtaining verification of Medicaid Drug Rehab benefits.

What Is Medicaid?

Medicaid is a health insurance program sponsored in part by the U.S. government and administered by the individual states. The primary purpose of the Medicaid program is to ensure that people with low income or certain other circumstances have access to health care insurance coverage.

Medicaid is different from Medicare. Medicare provides health insurance coverage for senior citizens and people with disabilities. The Medicare program is administered directly by the federal government, so it is managed consistently from state to state. By contrast, Medicaid works differently from one state to the next. That's because each state operates its own Medicaid program. But, every state offers some form of Medicaid coverage for addiction treatment.

Does Medicaid Pay for Drug and Alcohol Addiction Treatment?

Yes! The good news is that Medicaid does pay for outpatient drug and alcohol addiction treatment. Medicaid is a program that is funded by the state. This program can provide free or low-cost outpatient drug and alcohol addiction treatment to those who need it. While there are various Medicaid plans that have varying levels of eligibility, the rules for eligibility can change over time. This means that even if you were not eligible in the past, you might be eligible now.

In the past, people had trouble finding Medicaid addiction programs; however, since the Affordable Care Act (ACA) went into effect in 2010, Medicaid was required to cover most basic aspects of drug and alcohol rehab. Now, it is easier to find an addiction center that accepts Medicaid because this coverage is required.
